

Reproduction Disclosure Form

The Aresty Rutgers Undergraduate Research Journal (Aresty RURJ) is a platform for Rutgers undergraduate students to publish their own research. To illustrate their work, authors may utilize copyrighted materials that have already been published. This may include figures, illustrations, charts, tables, photographs, and text excerpts, whose use may require consent from the copyright holder depending on how they are reused. For guidance, authors can consult the Rutgers University Copyright Website, especially the sections on Copyright for Students and Scholarly Publishing: Traditional and Open Access. This site from Wiley, a major publisher of academic journals, provides useful information about re-using figures in journal articles.

Many publishers manage copyright permissions through the Copyright Clearance Center and its RightsLink service.

By signing below, the author discloses that their submission contains copyrighted materials, whose use requires consent from the copyright holder. The author verifies that they are compliant with copyright laws, have received permission to use these copyrighted materials, and understand that they bear full responsibility for any unforeseen copyright violations in their submission.
